70 Hours of

"MAKING SURE"

For Every Hour of Flying

As you glide smoothly, swiftly through the air in one of Northwest's new super-powered, 21-passenger Douglas airliners, hardly conscious of the steady hum of the two 1,200 horse power engines, you'll marvel that even flying can be so enjoyable, so easy! Yet for every hour your plane flies through the sky it spends more than 70 hours—man hours—on the ground where every bolt and screw and rivet—every moving part—is checked and double checked, minutely scrutinized and tested by skilled, government-licensed mechanics and engineers.
